THE BIMETALLIC RATIO.

The following letter from Mr. Woodruff, the Chinege Customs Service, appears in the New York Press of June 13th :-Sir,-Among the National gold Monometallate, even the most fair and the most com petent to speak loabt, first, flut the opening of their mais by all the chief governments world to the unlimited coinage of rol ad silver into full legal tender money common fixed ratio of 154 of silver to gold would give that relative value to the metals instead of their present relative value; and, second, that 154 to I would always concenturies prior to 1878 given clear proof of both

The annual increment from production is so small in comparison with the vast accumulated muss of the precious metals that although under the law of supply and demand "supply" must theorelioally have some affect on the relative market value, any changes sufficiently sudden to affect commerce are caused by demand alone.

This is admirably stated by Mr. Itothwell on page 13 of his "Universal Bimetallism." From this record (see page 37) it is very evident that during all the past, up at least to 1870, the value ratio of silver and gold was not governed by their production are during as containing two priests who were to he their production are during as containing two priests who were to he carriages containing two priests who were to he
